Not illustrated. 1884 Excerpt: .by November 4th, and next day artillery firing was heard in the direction of Nashville, over forty miles away. Couriers met them soon and announced that the Confederates had been driven back from an attempt to burn the railroad bridge across the Cumberland at Nashville. Here John Morgan established his record for dishonorable warfare, taking advantage of a flag of truce to form troops near the works and dash into the town. But they were driven off, the bridge saved and Nashville let alone. Within ten days from the time of assuming command Rosecrans had reconstructed the railway and established headquarters at Nashville, and had formed his army into three wings--Major-General Aleck McDowell McCook commanding the right, Major-General Geo. H. Thomas the center, and MajorGeneral Thomas L. Crittenden the left. For the next forty days all were busy perfecting arrangements for a forward movement. Supplies of...
