All was ended now, the hope, and the fear, and the sorrow; All the aching of heart, the restless, unsatisfied longing; All the dull deep pain, and constant anguish of patience. Longfellow. At Christmas the dull, slow current of time was broken into eddies again by the arrival of John Denys with a young companion chosen for life, a girl good and pretty enough to please all the world, and perfectly suited to the one whom her qualities and charms most concerned. She was called Eleanour. George was gone to Rome, and was absent that year, but Marie-Irene came as usual, welcome as sunshine and music to the old house lying dark and quiet in the shadow of death. VOL. II. T All the servants were glad of her. Everybody was glad of her. She was a reason for putting off gravity and beginning to smile again. But her eyes showed the quick tears often at first--when Hugh Oliver pattered downstairs alone, running after Sissy, when she saw the trophy Phcebe had set up in the nursery, and the one grave more in the churchyard. But most when she looked into her fathers face. Mr. Denys gloom did not pass, and there seemed no remedy. Mr. Swift promised his wife that it would clear away--as he had watched it clear away after his former more terrible bereavement--but she must wait. Meanwhile he directed her to encourage her husbands active...
