Not illustrated. 1901 Excerpt: .from going to pieces if they do not refuse to work with non-union men? If they should agree to this, would not their places be filled with non-union men, just as fast as they could be found, until the union was entirely displaced? Of course, it is necessary that union laborers have a preference for members of their organization, but to make it a part of their purpose of organization to prevent the employment of non-union men by refusing to work with them, wherever the union is strong enough, is coercion. It is exactly like the black-list of employers. On the other hand, it is true that this practice has been brought into existence by the unfair attitude of the employers towards union men. It is not an uncommon occurrence--I have known many such myself--that, for the purpose of ruining and ultimately breaking the union, employers will always prefer non-union laborers. Whenever a vacancy occurs, if a non-union man can be secured he gets the job. When no objection is raised to this, they systematically single out for discharge on any pretext the union men, and employ non-union men in their place. Laborers cannot be fooled on this. They see that by this process their union slowly melts away, and it is not unnatural, therefore, that they adopt some method to check this. In their crude effort the plan hit upon has been to refuse to work with non-union men. If the employers would be fair...
